EATING DISORDERS
Where to go when you’re looking for help

What is an eating disorder?

Eating disorders are conditions involving an obsession with food, weight and/or appearance that negatively affect people's health and daily living. To be diagnosed with an eating disorder, a person must have both disordered eating and psychological disturbance.

Anorexia nervosa: People with anorexia have an intense and irrational fear of gaining weight and having body fat. They may believe they're fat, even when well below the normal weight for their height and age. Anorexia is the most fatal eating disorder: some people may die of complications related to starvation, while others die of suicide.

Bulimia nervosa: People with bulimia go through cycles of bingeing and purging. Bingeing involves eating large amounts of food quickly. This makes people feel physically ill and anxious about gaining weight. Then they purge, which can involve vomiting, depriving themselves of food, over-exercising or using laxatives and diuretics.

Binge-eating disorder: People with binge eating disorder overeat compulsively, consuming huge amounts of food, often all at once. Like the other disorders, people with BED often feel out of control and powerless to stop the behaviour.

What are the recommended treatment options?

Treatment options include:

- psychoeducation, including self-help resources and resources for families
- nutritional counselling
- psychotherapy.
- medication
